Macrolide-resistant Streptococcus pneumoniae: a report of five cases. Five cases of macrolide-resistant Streptococcus pneumoniae have been reported. The majority of the strains were resistant to erythromycin and azithromycin but were susceptible to other macrolides and to other drugs tested. The three organisms that were multiresistant to penicillin and other antibiotics were found in cases with disseminated infection. The five isolates were indistinguishable by serotyping, ribotyping and antimicrobial susceptibility patterns.
